This is my first annual report letter as Chair of the Board of Directors of the Boston Foundation, and I want to begin by expressing my deep gratitude to Reverend Ray Hammond, who has chaired the Board for the last eight years. During his tenure, the Foundation extended its work in this community far beyond its traditional role as a grantmaker—and became a major civic leader for our city and region. As a result, today the Boston Foundation is not only responding to the needs of the people of Greater Boston—through its grantmaking to nonprofit organizations—but is helping to inform the public policies that have a profound effect on everyone who lives here.

In honor of Ray Hammond, the Boston Foundation has established a new $1 million Rev. Ray A. Hammond Fund for the Neighborhoods of Boston. This fund will be part of the Permanent Fund for Boston—which provides the essential resources the Foundation needs to respond swiftly and nimbly to the greatest challenges facing our community.

I also want to express my thanks to Carol Anderson, who served with excellence as Vice Chair of the Board over the last eight years—and I look forward to working with Catherine D’Amato, President and CEO of The Greater Boston Food Bank, our new Vice Chair. Her knowledge of the nonprofit sector and the needs of our community’s families will be invaluable as we work together with other Board members to help guide the Foundation’s work.

And I’m delighted that two new members have joined our Board of Directors: Grace Fey, President of Grace Fey Advisors; and Greg Shell, a Research Analyst with the International Active Division at GMO. Both bring a strong background in business and nonprofit service to these positions—and they are approaching their tenure with tremendous enthusiasm about the Boston Foundation.

I want to acknowledge—and thank—Paul Grogan and our excellent staff for all their efforts on behalf of the Foundation. During a very difficult time—for Greater Boston and the country—I am proud that this year’s grants total was even higher than the previous fiscal year. It says a great deal about our donors and about the Foundation’s dedication to this community.

I am also proud that the campaign for the Civic Leadership Fund, which supports the ‘beyond grantmaking’ work of the Foundation, once again topped the $1 million mark—which not only reflects the generosity of our donors, but also the high regard they have for this important work. Through its civic leadership, the Boston Foundation not only provides fresh research and a forum to explore issues—but stimulates real change and progress.

Through all of these efforts, which are helping to create the change our community needs in education, health, housing and other areas central to our well-being, I consider the Boston Foundation to be nothing less than the social conscience of Greater Boston—and I am honored to be a part of this important organization.

Michael B. Keating, Esq.
Chair
The Boston Foundation’s grantmaking reached a watershed moment this year when total grants made since its founding in 1915 topped $1 billion. Half of that total went out over the last eight years alone. It was particularly timely, then, for the Boston Foundation to announce, as we did in September of 2009, newly articulated goals and objectives for the Foundation—including exciting changes to our competitive grantmaking in Greater Boston.

These goals and objectives place a strategic focus on the people and places that make up our splendid city—and reflect our deep commitment to strengthening our communities and the competitiveness of the entire region. Through them, we seek to have a profound impact on important areas of community life—including dramatic improvements in education and health attainment; safe and vibrant neighborhoods; robust arts and cultural opportunities—and a regional economy that enables everyone to thrive.

These changes are informed by an enormous body of research conducted by the Boston Foundation and our partners over the last eight years, providing us with unique insight into the problems and challenges we face as a community.

They are also the result of insights gained from Greater Boston’s nonprofit community itself—through numerous community conversations we’ve had over the last year in our city’s neighborhoods. Inspired by these conversations, we are committed to working more closely than ever with all of the communities we serve by building deep relationships and partnerships—both with organizations and with residents themselves.

In this spirit, with this year’s annual report we are launching a multi-platform media project called My Neighborhood: Boston. Through this project, we are inviting the people of Boston to engage in a dynamic dialogue about the neighborhoods in which they live, work and grew up. We feature five representative neighborhoods in this report, but we reflect all of our city’s diverse neighborhoods through a new website at www.myneighborhoodboston.com and plan to develop additional media projects over the coming years.

This print report reflects just some of the art and photography submitted in response to a “call for submissions” we made over the summer. Some of the works are by accomplished artists, like Ekua Holmes, whose remarkable collage graces the cover. Others are from participants in projects that were inspired by our theme, such as the paintings by children that illustrate the article on the South End, which were the result of an assignment given to them at the Children’s Art Centre.

We are honored and delighted by the responses we received to our call for submissions. We could only use a small portion of the works that were submitted here and will reflect many more online in the future. But paging through this publication will give you a sense of the extraordinary creativity of Boston’s residents and of the cultural richness of the neighborhoods they live in, work in and love.

President and CEO
2009 at the Boston Foundation

The Boston Foundation’s Civic Leadership in 2009

Fresh Research + Major Convenings + Task Forces = Real Progress

Thanks to the support of the Civic Leadership Fund, which once again raised more than $1 million this year, the Boston Foundation worked with hundreds of leaders and stakeholders to stimulate the change we need in education, health and other areas of critical importance to our city and region.

Fresh Research

The Boston Foundation and its research partners published five major reports on education this year, including the city’s first Education Report Card from the Boston Indicators Project and an eye-opening report on how Boston Public Schools students are doing in college. Other studies included this year’s Housing Report Card and a follow-up to 2007’s Boston Bound, called Home Field Disadvantage, which made the case that an outdated legal system is tying the hands of Boston when it comes to tax revenue, and putting Massachusetts at a competitive disadvantage. And the second report created with the New England Healthcare Institute presented a blueprint for focusing the health care debate on preventable chronic disease.

Stimulating Forums

State and local officials, a national leader in the charter school movement and experts from academia—these and hundreds of others came to the Boston Foundation this year to engage in provocative dialogues about the results of groundbreaking studies published by the Boston Foundation. Overflow crowds attended five major forums on education reform. Other forums examined the challenges faced by Boston’s most vulnerable residents during the winter, youth violence prevention, and strengthening the nonprofit sector.

Real Reform

The Foundation’s research and forums kept education reform in the news and the Race to the Top Coalition, a unique group of community leaders convened by the Foundation, played a key role in passing pioneering education reform legislation. In addition, the work of the award-winning Commonwealth Housing Task Force, also convened by the Foundation, led to 10,800 permitted smart-growth housing units in 29 cities and towns. And progress continued in strengthening our state’s cultural facilities, totaling close to $40 million in direct investment, while leveraging some $200 million.
Mission
As Greater Boston’s community foundation since 1915, the Boston Foundation devotes its resources to building and sustaining a vital, prosperous city and region, where justice and opportunity are extended to everyone. It fulfills this mission in three principal ways:

- Making grants to nonprofit organizations and designing special funding initiatives to address the community’s critical challenges;
- Working in partnership with our donors and other funders to achieve high-impact philanthropy; and
- Serving as a civic hub and center of information, where ideas are shared, levers for change are identified, and common agendas for the future are developed.

Value Statement
In everything we do, we seek to broaden participation, foster collaboration and heal racial, ethnic and community divisions.

A Strategic Focus on People and Place
All of the work of the Boston Foundation is guided by two main strategic goals that reflect our deep commitment to strengthening our communities:

- Greater Boston residents are successful and thriving;
- Greater Boston communities are vibrant, safe and affordable.

Through these goals, we seek to have a profound impact on important areas of community life—including dramatic improvements in education and health attainment; safe and vibrant neighborhoods; robust arts and cultural opportunities; and a regional economy that enables everyone to thrive.

Our Grantmaking in Greater Boston
Through our competitive grantmaking in Greater Boston, the Boston Foundation supports organizations across a broad range of issues, while being guided by our strategic focus on people and place.

This grantmaking is made possible through the generous support of those who have contributed to the Permanent Fund for Boston, which has been built by hundreds of donors since 1915 to meet the changing needs of our community.

The Boston Foundation offers large, multi-year General Operating Support Grants to nonprofit organizations whose missions are closely aligned with the Foundation’s goals and objectives. We also offer Project Support Grants for specific programs that reflect our goals, Special Opportunity Grants for new ideas that tackle long-standing or emerging community challenges, and other types of grants and support. The Foundation works closely with the nonprofit organizations that receive grants and all of the communities we serve (see Applying for a Grant on page 47 for more).

Customizing Charitable Solutions for Our Donors
The Boston Foundation creates a giving plan to fit each of our donors—whether they are just beginning their philanthropic journey or possess a high level of clarity and sophistication. We pride ourselves in marrying our donors’ aspirations and passion for giving with our deep understanding of the important issues facing our communities.
Through Donor Advised Funds, our donors make unlimited grants anywhere in the United States or abroad. These funds operate much like a private foundation, without the administrative or payout burdens. As a Donor Advised Fund expert for more than 30 years, the Foundation works closely with our donors to create positive change for the causes they care about most.

The Foundation also offers funds that allow donors to invest in the future of Greater Boston and the issues and organizations that have a profound impact on their lives—through gifts or bequests to the Permanent Fund for Boston, Boston’s primary endowment fund, or Field of Interest Funds that benefit a particular issue. In addition, the Foundation has a number of Designated Funds that provide annual support to many of our city’s most important nonprofit organizations. (See Becoming a Donor on page 48 for more.)

Creating the Change We Need through Civic Leadership

Over the last decade, the Boston Foundation has become a major civic leader for Greater Boston and our region—with crucial support from the Civic Leadership Fund at the Boston Foundation, which raised more than $1 million this year.

Through our Understanding Boston series, we identify challenges facing our city and region, commission fresh research and share information through a series of popular forums that are attended by thousands of people every year. The Foundation also is known for forming task forces of experts dedicated to fulfilling powerful agendas for change—and engaging in public policy work in partnership with other civic leaders and policy makers. Through all of this work, we are helping to create the change we need in education, housing, health and other areas of critical importance to the people of our city and region.

The Foundation also sponsors the Boston Indicators Project, which provides a comprehensive, constantly-updated body of information about every aspect of life in Greater Boston through bold, groundbreaking reports and an award-winning state-of-the-art website at www.bostonindicators.org.

More than $17 Million in Additional Funds Leveraged

As Greater Boston’s community foundation, the Boston Foundation is in a unique position at the center of this region’s philanthropic and nonprofit sectors, which enables it to leverage millions of dollars in additional resources for the benefit of the city and region. In 2009, the Foundation leveraged:

- Close to $4 million for special initiatives, such as those in civic engagement, youth mentoring, and food and fuel for vulnerable populations affected by the recession.
- $1.7 million for SkillWorks to address critical issues related to the city’s workforce development system, with a total of close to $15 million pledged over five years.
- Some $3.11 million for collaboratives, including $1.4 million for English for New Bostonians; $980,000 for the Boston Schoolyard Initiative; $521,000 for the Achieving the Dream higher education funder collaborative; and $160,000 for Social Venture Partners-Boston.
- $100,000 in additional funds distributed in collaboration with Microsoft Corporation’s “Unlimited Potential” giving program.
- More than $900,000 in co-funding from Boston Foundation donors to strengthen the impact of the Foundation’s competitive grantmaking in Greater Boston.
- More than $8.6 million in Donor Advised Fund grants directed to organizations supported by Discretionary Funds during 2009.
- More than $1.4 million raised for the StreetSafe Boston initiative, with $9.2 million pledged overall.
- More than $230,000 in additional donations to the Food and Fuel initiative making $736,100 in grants possible to provide immediate support over the winter.

Program Related Investments Have Leveraged $480 Million

In 2002, the Boston Foundation’s Board set aside $10 million from the principal of the Permanent Fund for Boston for Program Related Investments (PRIs). Investments to date include $6.5 million in PRI loans for housing, neighborhood stabilization and energy retrofits, and $2.5 million in loan guarantees for the construction of charter schools. These investments, made in partnership with other funders, have helped finance more than 2,500 units of housing and 14 charter schools and leveraged some $480 million in additional financing.
Bostonians are passionate about their neighborhoods. From the tightly packed streets of Chinatown and the North End to the residential boulevards of Roslindale and reclaimed corners of Roxbury, those who live, work and grow up in Boston’s neighborhoods have a remarkably deep connection to them—and a tremendous pride in them.

Since the Boston Foundation opened its doors in 1915 it has shared this passion. The very first grants the Foundation made were to settlement houses that were rooted in Boston’s neighborhoods, offering all-embracing support to residents—especially newcomers. Since then, the Foundation has supported hundreds of nonprofit organizations that serve Boston’s neighborhoods, including community health centers, community development corporations and neighborhood-based programs that offer an astonishing array of services and supports.

With this year’s annual report, we decided to honor and celebrate the Foundation’s passion and deep connection to our city’s neighborhoods by launching a multi-platform media project called My Neighborhood: Boston. Through this project, we invite the people of Boston to engage in a dynamic dialogue about the places where they live and work.

We began with a “call for submissions” for photographs and art to illustrate this report. Images started arriving over the summer. Paintings and photographs came in from accomplished and budding artists of all ages. Old photos arrived from people who had inherited family albums. Nonprofits mined their archives; others invited us to photograph quilts, murals and statues—some even asked participants in their programs to create art specifically for this project.

This annual report features just five Boston neighborhoods—and it only scratches the surface of those. The articles focus on the challenges these neighborhoods have overcome and the many assets they have, but it is important to point out that three of them—Dorchester, Roxbury and the South End—also contain areas targeted by the Boston Foundation’s StreetSafe Boston initiative, because they are the site of some of the most violent youth crime in the city.

In addition to this report, we encourage you to visit www.myneighborhoodboston.org, a website that features images and writing from residents of all of Boston’s neighborhoods—and we invite you to participate by sending us photographs, art and writing that evoke your own neighborhood. We hope that by providing this evolving platform, all of us will be enriched—and we will develop an even greater affection and admiration for this remarkable city of neighborhoods that we call “home.”

“Let the Games Begin” is the title of this collage by Ekua Holmes, who created the collage on the cover of this report before this one. “The earlier work is more wistful and innocent,” she says. “This one is meant to hint at some of the hard choices facing a child in the inner city.”
The South End

If the land under the brownstones and gardens of the South End was created in the 1800s—when a vast tidal marsh was filled with gravel—this neighborhood’s powerful sense of community was forged during the 1960s and 1970s.

In 1968, hundreds of demonstrators protested the massive displacement being caused by urban renewal by pitching an impromptu “tent city” on the site of a recently demolished building, launching a decades-long battle for affordable housing. That same year, activists from the Puerto Rican community successfully stared down bulldozers for the right to develop their own neighborhood, forming Inquilinos Boricuas en Acción (IBA).

Today, Tent City, the development that stands as a tribute to the tenacity of those original urban campers, provides some 300 affordable units of housing. And IBA’s Villa Victoria is a 435-unit housing community. Both are oases of affordable housing and educational programming in what is now an increasingly gentrified part of Boston.

Also in the 1960s, five old Boston settlement houses merged to form United South End Settlements (USES), which today is a cornerstone community institution, with its Harriet Tubman House serving as a welcoming gathering place and educational center.
And in 1970, another group of neighborhood activists saved a complex of deteriorating historic buildings, transforming it into the Boston Center for the Arts, which now houses artists’ studios, galleries, two theaters and the Boston Ballet.

The South End is home to some 28,000 residents—45 percent white, 23 percent African American, 16 percent Latino and 12 percent Asian. The annual per capita income is high here—close to $36,000—but 24 percent of people live in poverty, suggesting yawning gaps in income between those who are doing extremely well and those who are struggling.

The Boston Foundation was there with support in 1960 when United South End Settlements (USES) was created from five old settlement houses. Since 1990 alone, the Foundation and its donors have made more than $1.2 million in grants to USES, which provides comprehensive programs that address the needs of the South End’s residents. Recent grants totaling some $65,000 have gone to the agency’s efforts to measure its impact.

The Foundation has also made $80,000 in grants over the last four years.

Boston sculptor Fern Cunningham’s bronze statue “Step on Board” depicts Harriet Tubman in the South End park named for the abolitionist who passed through Boston toting a bible and a gun as a major conductor on the Underground Railroad.

This graphite drawing by Kate Sullivan shows the classic brownstones of the South End, which is listed on the National Register of Historic Places as the largest urban Victorian neighborhood in the United States.

“Old Ben,” by artist Hal Trafford is one in a series of watercolors that he calls “Park People,” the result of his regular sketching sessions in the South End’s Union Park.
to the South End Technology Center @ Tent City to expand its Learn 2 Teach, Teach 2 Learn program, which is increasing the number of Boston youth who are knowledgeable and engaged in science, technology and math.

The Foundation was “there at the beginning” for Inquilinos Boricuas en Acción (IBA), as it established the Villa Victoria community, and this year, a grant of $50,000 went to help IBA build awareness for its Villa Victoria Center for the Arts, a cultural center devoted to celebrating Latino arts through performances and exhibits. Since 1991, the Foundation and its donors have made more than $1.3 million in grants to IBA, including support for its programs teaching technology to South End residents.

Some $615,000 in grants has gone to the Boston Center for the Arts since 1990. The Foundation also has made close to $500,000 in grants to the South End’s Boston Renaissance Charter School, the largest charter school in the city.

The opening parade of the 2009 Festival Betances, a collaboration between Inquilinos Boricuas en Acción, Villa Victoria Center for the Arts and the residents of Villa Victoria, celebrating Puerto Rican and Latino culture is captured by photographer Angela Rowlings who has been documenting the festival for eight years.
Artist and South End resident Joe Fiorello understands all too well how urban renewal—which threatened to transform parts of Boston’s South End in the early 1960s—was capable of literally destroying a neighborhood. In the late 1950s, when he was a young boy, his family, including his parents and grandparents, lived in Boston’s West End when it fell victim to what the Boston Globe called “an unforgiving urban renewal rampage.”

Modest homes were labeled slums, buildings were destroyed and countless people, including many Italian and Jewish families that had lived there for generations, were displaced. The neighborhood’s razed buildings made way for a high-rise complex of apartments that very few of the West End’s original residents could afford.

“My grandfather was one of the last holdouts,” says Mr. Fiorello. “He waited until the wrecking balls arrived before he would leave.” Mr. Fiorello’s family and other residents of the West End moved to lower-priced neighborhoods outside of the city. But what was lost, when the old West End was “renewed,” was the kind of place where virtually everything you needed and most people you knew were all within walking distance. “We moved for a while to my mother’s family’s farm,” he explains, “but you had to drive everywhere, so the experience was very different from living in a neighborhood like the West End.”

It was in search of that kind of community—and low real estate prices—that Joe Fiorello moved to the South End about 30 years ago. “I had lived in Back Bay for a while,” he explains, “and the South End had many of the same qualities, but it was affordable.” At that time, it was possible to buy a house that was large enough to have a spare room for Mr. Fiorello’s work as an artist.

Today, Joe Fiorello is a well-known and highly regarded sculptor and painter. His sculptures are life size or even slightly larger than life and are made of found materials, such as metal scraps salvaged from the kind of high-rise, high-end apartment buildings that replaced the brownstones of the West End.

Mr. Fiorello’s affection for the South End has only grown over the years. He remains grateful that, back in the early 1960s, the residents of the South End... stopped urban renewal from destroying their neighborhood as it had the West End of his youth. “If residents hadn’t pitched that tent city or stood up to those bulldozers, the South End might be full of high rises today,” he says.

“Today, it’s a place where you walk to find everything you need and it’s close to every other neighborhood in Boston.”

In keeping with his affection for this community, Mr. Fiorello is a member of the Rogerson Legacy Society at the Boston Foundation, which is named for the Foundation’s founders, and recognizes and honors those who plan to leave a legacy to the community of Greater Boston through the Boston Foundation. “I don’t have any children,” explains Mr. Fiorello, “and this city has been very good to me, so I want to leave something behind that will benefit this community. I chose the Boston Foundation because such a large percentage of its assets goes directly into its programming—and it serves the people and the places I care most about.”
If Dorchester were a city, its 92,000 residents would make it the seventh largest in Massachusetts. In fact, it was a separate town for its first 200 years. Founded in 1630, one month before Boston, it boasts a striking list of American ‘firsts’—among them the first town to support a public school by taxation and the first to hold a town meeting. During the 19th century, Dorchester gradually evolved into a suburb of Boston, linked by the Old Colony Railroad—and was annexed to the city in 1870.

Today, Dorchester is the site of a presidential library and a major campus of the University of Massachusetts—but it really is defined by the remarkable diversity of its people. With a large white population, making up about one-third of its residents—including Irish American families that have lived here for generations—Dorchester is also home to many African Americans and Latinos—and has substantial Vietnamese and Caribbean communities.

This vast neighborhood’s many parts are joined together by Dorchester Avenue, which runs through it like a spine. And it finds much of its cohesiveness through a powerful infrastructure of nonprofit organizations—made even more impressive by their willingness to work together.

One example is Dotwell, a collaborative effort of Codman Square Health Center and Dorchester House Multi-Service Center. Its mission is not only to tackle serious health disparities among Dorchester’s residents, but also to build social capital across Dorchester’s neighborhoods. The Boston Foundation has been a partner of Dotwell since 2003, providing more than $300,000 in funding since then.

Another remarkable collaboration is the Fairmount/Indigo Line CDC Collaborative, which brings together four community development corporations from several neighborhoods, including Dorchester Bay, Codman Square, Mattapan, and Southwest Boston. The Collaborative has received national recognition for its smart growth, transit-oriented development plan around the new MBTA commuter rail system. The Foundation has made grants totaling $265,000 to this effort over the last three years, including $125,000 this year.

Dorchester is served by 17 schools and the Foundation has supported many of them, especially the neighborhood’s pilot and charter schools. Boston Collegiate Charter School has received more than $120,000 from the Foundation’s Innovative Schools Initiative Fund since 1998. And just this year, that same special fund gave TechBoston Academy $100,000 to expand from high school into the middle school grades.

Freedom House, one of the oldest community centers serving people of color in Boston, is located in Grove Hall, which bridges Dorchester and Roxbury. The Boston Foundation has a Designated Fund that honors Freedom House’s founders, Muriel and Otto Snowden, which provides some $60,000 annually in unrestricted support. Over the last 20 years, Freedom House has received $1.8 million in support from that fund and from grants through the Foundation’s competitive grantmaking program. Another Grove Hall nonprofit, Project R.I.G.H.T., is one of the most effective neighborhood-based organizing groups in the city. Since 1990, the Foundation has awarded more than $600,000 in grants to this agency.

No survey of nonprofits is complete without Federated Dorchester Neighborhood Houses, formed when several settlement houses merged in 1965. The agency received $1.2 million from the Foundation over the years for its programs serving children, youth and adults. Recently the agency adopted a new mission. Now called College Bound Dorchester, its goal is to ensure that all students are on the path to college.

Luis Mayers, who grew up in Dorchester, created this painting, called “Train,” as part of an Artists for Humanity project.

Haidan Hodgson, who lives in Dorchester and is a project coordinator with Artists for Humanity, took this photo of Dorchester North Burying Ground in Upham’s Corner, one of the oldest cemeteries in America.
Xavier Wilson, 16, painted this banner during a summer program at DotArt that produced all-weather banners strung along Dorchester Avenue. “The green dollar bills,” he explains, “represent my desire to give back to this community.”

This painting of Ashmont’s iconic Peabody Square, by Dorchester artist Celia McDonough, features the historic four-dial post clock first erected in 1910 and re-installed in 2003.
South Boston

South Boston officially became a part of Boston in 1804, but its character wasn’t formed until about 30 years later when poor immigrants from Ireland began to stake their claim here. They lived cheaply, if not comfortably, and the men found work in industries near the docks, while the women traveled over Fort Point Channel for jobs as domestics on Beacon Hill. As these families multiplied, worked hard and began to build their own wood-framed houses, “Southie,” one of the most famous neighborhoods in America, was truly born.

In recent years, this neighborhood has caught the eye of young professionals, lured by affordable real estate and lovely waterfront parks and beaches. They and a diverse group of immigrants from Central America and other regions are changing the face of South Boston. Still, 85 percent of this neighborhood’s 30,000 residents are white and just 7.6 percent Latino.

During the 1970s, of course, South Boston was thrust into the national spotlight for its opposition to the court-ordered desegregation of Boston’s schools—and even today, only 2.3 percent of residents are African American. But as you walk the streets of this neighborhood, diversity is everywhere—and it feels increasingly comfortable. And for most of the people who live here, South Boston continues to provide an old-fashioned kind of community that is hard to find in a big city.

Some of the first grants ever made by the Boston Foundation, in the early 1900s, were to South Boston Neighborhood House, a settlement house that has been an anchor in this neighborhood since 1901. Today, it continues to provide programs to all ages and has moved from its original building into new digs on H Street in the South End, just blocks from the South Boston waterfront. The new building was constructed with the help of volunteers from the building trades in an old-fashioned barn raising event that spanned just a few weeks. Since 1990 alone, the Boston Foundation has made some $500,000 in grants to this important community institution, including a grant of $30,000 this year for a program that will help to support the organization’s long-term financial health.

Another anchor institution is Julie’s Family Learning Program, which was established in 1974 by the Sisters of Notre Dame in response to their experiences with large numbers of low-income families, mostly female-headed, living with the pervasive effects of poverty. In the late 1990s, this organization, which has developed deep community roots, designed programs to respond to the negative effects of welfare reform mandates on disadvantaged families in South Boston—and the Boston Foundation responded by providing close to $700,000 in grants since 1997.

In 2004, the youth arts organization Artists for Humanity became a new presence in the Fort Point Channel area of South Boston when it relocated to its 23,500 square foot EpiCenter on West Second Street—a 100 percent renewable energy green facility, which includes state-of-the-art art studios for its youth programming and a 5,000 square foot gallery. This powerful program bridges economic, racial and social divisions by providing youth from throughout Boston with paid employment in the arts. The Boston Foundation and our donors have been proud supporters of this group and its new facility, with $500,000 in grants made to this organization since it was founded in 1991.
Brenda Leong, a former participant in Artists for Humanity who was born in Boston’s Chinatown, took this shot of Southie houses and the persistence of nature.

If Roxbury’s early history begins with the immigration of European colonial settlers in the 1600s, its more recent history begins with the migration of African Americans from other parts of Boston—specifically Beacon Hill and the South End—and from other regions of the country, especially the South. By 1960, this neighborhood had become the heart of African American life and culture in Boston—with prominent figures like Melnea Cass, Elma Lewis and Muriel and Otto Snowden writing its story. Even today, 63 percent of Roxbury’s 55,000 residents are African American, but there is also a large Latino community—and diversity is becoming one of this neighborhood’s greatest sources of strength and pride.

Roxbury is the geographic center of Boston and for those who live in this neighborhood—especially those who grew up here—it is also the emotional center. Though its residents struggle with high rates of poverty—and the foreclosure crisis has hit this neighborhood hard—in recent decades it has been undergoing a renaissance as a community, with new businesses and housing initiatives revitalizing its neighborhoods.

None is more widely known than the Dudley Street Neighborhood
Initiative (DSNI), which brought together African American, Latino, Cape Verdean and white residents to respond to decades of disinvestment through one of the most successful community-based organizing efforts in U.S. history. The Boston Foundation has invested more than $1.2 million in grants over the years to DSNI, helping it to transform 1,300 abandoned parcels of land into 400 new, high quality affordable houses, community centers, schools and Dudley Town Common.

Roxbury also boasts three community development corporations—all supported through the Foundation for many years, including Nuestra Comunidad, Urban Edge and Madison Park Development Corporation. Madison Park is home to ACT Roxbury, an artistic program blessed by its own center in the renovated Hibernian Hall. The Boston Foundation has made grants of close to $400,000 to support ACT Roxbury’s programming and its transition to its new home.

The Foundation also has supported Roxbury’s six pilot schools, with close to $100,000 in grants, and made an additional $64,000 in grants to Roxbury Preparatory Charter School, which prides itself on a strong culture of student achievement, and $70,000 to the John D. O’Bryant School of Math and Science for its innovative focus on teaching technology.

Nonprofits built from the ground up by Roxbury’s Latino community also have received support through the Foundation. Sociedad Latina, at the age of 55, Vanessa Loud returned to Roxbury from the South this year and, through her art, turned to themes of her youth. “This painting shows how we girls adorned ourselves when we stepped out on a Saturday night,” she says.
located on Mission Hill, has received some $250,000 for its work with Latino youth, and Boston’s largest nonprofit serving the Latino community, La Alianza Hispana, has received $275,000 over the last three years alone to strengthen the organization’s work and role in the community.

Roxbury is also a proud home to two of the most highly-regarded community health centers in Boston. Dimock Community Health Center, which has a 145-year history of focusing on the health of the people of Roxbury and surrounding communities, has received more than $1 million in support from the Foundation over the last 20 years and Whittier Street Health Center was awarded an unsolicited $75,000 Out-of-the-Blue grant several years ago for its exceptional programming and care.

As the people of Roxbury continue to write their own history, the Boston Foundation will continue to stand with them, as they rise to meet the challenges of the future with the same kind of will power and creativity that they have used to meet those of the past.
Three of the neighborhoods featured in this annual report—Dorchester, Roxbury and the South End—contain areas that are identified as violent crime “hot spots” by StreetSafe Boston, a Boston Foundation initiative dedicated to reducing youth violence in Boston. The initiative uses a two-pronged approach, including a network of streetworkers deployed to those hot spots and community-based partners offering a myriad of services to young people—from employment and recreation to housing and education.

From its earliest days, StreetSafe Boston has benefited from an unprecedented partnership—unique, when compared with anti-violence programs in other cities. This partnership includes the Boston Foundation, Mayor Thomas M. Menino, the Boston Police Department, public and private civic leaders, community- and faith-based organizations and funders.

One of the first major funding partners was the State Street Foundation, Inc., the grantmaking arm of the State Street Corporation, the world’s leading provider of financial services to institutional investors. The State Street Foundation made an initial commitment of $250,000 to the initiative as part of its focus on serving the less advantaged members of our community, especially through supporting workforce development and education.

George A. Russell Jr., President of the State Street Foundation and Executive Vice President and Director of State Street’s Community Affairs, was born in 1949 in Boston and spent the first eight years of his life at 108 Waumbeck Street in Roxbury, in the center of what is now considered a violent “hot spot” by StreetSafe Boston. He has warm memories of a cohesive neighborhood of two-parent families, full of role models for a young boy—from judges to police officers and business people.

“My father owned a real estate and insurance business—and people who eventually became leading figures in town came to our house, including Edward Brooke, who became a U.S. Senator, and Royal Bolling Sr., who later became the first African American Massachusetts State Senator,” he says. “Mel Miller, publisher of the Bay State Banner lived up the street. I played baseball in Franklin Park and went swimming at the YMCA, especially in the summer. My parents believed deeply in taking advantage of programs offered by the Y and the Boy Scouts and Boys Clubs—and in pursuing an education.”
Mr. Russell did pursue an education and made his parents proud. He graduated from Boston Technical High School and went on to graduate from Clark University and earn an M.B.A. in Finance from New York University. He began his career working on the lending side of Boston-based State Street Bank & Trust Company, and then served as Treasurer and Chief Financial Officer of the City of Boston under Mayor Ray Flynn. After a stint as President & CEO of Freedom National Bank in Harlem, an organization that was deeply involved in serving its community, he returned to Boston and to State Street Corporation to take on his current role.

It has been disheartening for him to witness the deterioration of parts of Roxbury over the years. But the unrest of the early 1960s—and growing opportunities for middle-class African American families to live in other neighborhoods—accelerated the decline of the neighborhood. Many middle class families moved out and too much disinvestment and crime moved in.

Of State Street’s early support of StreetSafe Boston, he says: “If the business community wants Boston to remain a world class city, we simply have to address this important issue. Too many of the youth we are focused on through this initiative are lacking exactly what I had growing up—role models and opportunities for positive activities, self development and education. I believe that StreetSafe Boston has identified the right intervention strategies—and that it is taking the steps we need to stop the unacceptable and heartbreaking cycle of youth violence in our city.”
It’s hard to believe this neighborhood, covering just two-tenths of a square mile, is one of the largest Chinatowns in the country—but density tells the story. Chinatown is one of the most heavily populated neighborhoods in Boston, with more than 6,000 residents. Almost 70 percent of its inhabitants are Asian—and, despite a vague sense among the general public that they are doing better than other people of color, many struggle with poverty. Chinatown has a median annual income of just $14,289. Most middle-income residents have long since moved away to the suburbs, although they return to Chinatown for church, for shopping and for a profound sense of community.

Bostonians and tourists know Chinatown for its restaurants and fabric shops, but this is a real neighborhood. Entire families live above and next to restaurants and markets selling fresh—in some cases live—fish and seafood. Other streets are primarily residential. Elderly women start their day doing Tai Chi in the park. Hundreds of people gather together on summer evenings to watch kung fu films projected on the side of a building—some in their pajamas.

This close-knit neighborhood experienced a wrenching period of displacement in the early 1960s, when Hudson Street and other blocks central... to the identity of Chinatown were torn down so that a ramp to the Central Artery could be built. Residents and small businesses were offered just 30 percent of the value of their properties as they scrambled to relocate.

But this is one of the neighborhoods benefiting mightily from the Big Dig. The removal of the ramp has created the Parcel 24 project, being developed by the Asian Community Development Corporation (ACDC), to provide much needed mixed-income housing and green space. With the deep involvement of residents in the design, including former residents of Hudson Street, the hope is to capture the street’s sense of history as well.

This year, the Boston Foundation made a grant of $70,000 to ACDC for an initiative that will harness information technologies to preserve the character of neighborhoods during development projects. The Foundation is also a long-time supporter of the Chinese Progressive Association, making more than $760,000 in grants since 1989. Today, the Association is spearheading the “Campaign to Protect Chinatown,” to head off another era of development that could hurt residents—in this case, with luxury condominiums. This year, a $30,000 grant went to efforts to reach out to voters through a nonpartisan voter education and registration campaign.

It is possible to see the many benefits of thoughtful new development in the vibrant Boston Chinatown Neighborhood Center. Throughout its 36-year history, this dynamic organization,

The Chinatown “Unity-Community” mural was painted by Wen-ti Tsen and David Fichter with the help of residents to reflect the journey of the Chinese American experience. It was demolished to pave the way for the 23-story Metropolitan complex, but a replica of the mural stands in the lobby of the Boston Chinatown Neighborhood Center. which initially offered English language classes to Asian residents, has steadily added programs. Today it operates from a handsome “green” building on Ash Street, and offers everything from adult education to child care to activities for teens. The Boston Foundation has provided close to $150,000 to the Center over the years, with a grant of $40,000 for ESOL courses this year through the English for New Bostonians Fund.

The Asian American Civic Association has received $1.5 million in grants from the Foundation since 1990 for its work providing Chinatown’s residents with education, occupational training and other services. This year, a grant of $40,000 went for ESOL courses through the English for New Bostonians Fund and $10,000 went for developing ‘green’ jobs. The Association has been a partner in SkillWorks, a public/private workforce development initiative housed at the Foundation, recently receiving a grant of $250,000 for an automotive career education and training program.
In 2009, the Boston Foundation and its donors made more than $95 million in grants to nonprofit organizations in the Greater Boston community and across the country. To convey the full breadth of this grantmaking, a representative group of selected grants from all funds—Discretionary, Designated and Advised—are presented in the following pages, organized by broad categories. The Foundation’s Board authorizes all grants.

Selected Grants from Discretionary Funds
Discretionary Funds are the primary funds for which nonprofit organizations may apply. They include: the Permanent Fund for Boston, which is the largest unrestricted fund and has been built by hundreds of civic-minded Bostonians over the years; Named Funds—often established to honor a notable person or organization; and Field of Interest Funds, created by donors who care deeply about a specific area of community life. Many grants are made from a combination of these different kinds of funds. In the following lists, we briefly describe the purpose of each grant.

Selected Grants from Designated Funds
Grants from Designated Funds go to specific nonprofit organizations in keeping with the terms established by donors over the years. These grants provide annual support for many of the community’s most important institutions. There are no purposes listed for these grants because they are generally for broad organizational support.

Selected Grants from Donor Advised Funds
Donor Advised Funds are established by people who want to be actively involved in the grantmaking process. Many of these donors have a commitment to strengthening the Greater Boston community, and take advantage of the knowledge the Boston Foundation has about the issues that are most pressing and the nonprofit organizations that are most effective. There are no purposes listed for these grants because they are generally for broad organizational support.

Each year, the Boston Foundation distributes about $17 million from its Permanent Fund for Boston, an endowed pool of funds contributed to by donors who want to see this community thrive. These funds are awarded in a competitive process through a variety of grantmaking programs that are open to requests from nonprofits serving or benefiting the people of Greater Boston. All grants are approved by the Foundation’s Board of Directors.

To be eligible for support, an organization must be tax-exempt or operate under the fiscal sponsorship of a tax-exempt nonprofit and primarily serve the people of Greater Boston, with the exception of regional, statewide or national public policy efforts that may benefit a substantial portion of the community.

A Flexible Application Process
Nonprofit organizations apply for grants from the Boston Foundation on their own timetable through a flexible process that begins with a Letter of Inquiry.

Types of Grants
Three principal types of grants are considered through our competitive grants process:

General Operating Support Grants
The majority of the Boston Foundation’s competitive grants are made to support the core operations of organizations with missions and activities that are highly aligned with the Foundation’s goal and objectives.

Project Support Grants
The Foundation also makes grants to support specific projects or programs that are highly aligned with the Foundation’s priority strategies.

Special Opportunity Grants
The Foundation provides an open door to new ideas for tackling long-standing or emerging problems in our community that may or may not be directly aligned with our priority strategies.

Other types of grants are made through special initiatives and other programs, which are detailed on our website. The website also has specific strategies designed to meet our goals and objectives.

Becoming a Donor

Customizing Charitable Solutions One Donor at a Time

It all begins with you. Your vision joined with our experience means that together we can design a philanthropic plan that fits your goals. We will marry your aspirations and passion for giving with our deep understanding of the important issues facing our communities to achieve results that matter.

Whether you are just beginning your philanthropic journey or possess a high level of clarity and sophistication, we strategically tailor solutions to serve you and create positive change for the causes you care about.

Meeting Your Goals Through a Donor Advised Fund

The Boston Foundation has been a Donor Advised Fund expert for 30 years and has hundreds of these funds—ranging in size from $10,000 to $40 million. A Donor Advised Fund operates much like a private foundation, without the administrative or payout burdens. You make unlimited grants anywhere in the U.S. or abroad when it is most convenient for you—and receive the maximum charitable tax deduction every time you add to your fund. It’s quick and easy to set one up.

Expertise and Service That Can Maximize Your Giving

We have an entire Philanthropic and Donor Services Department to assist you. Our knowledgeable staff serves as a liaison with charities close to home and far away—lending expertise on a wide range of issues and helping you measure the impact of your giving. We will invite you to forums on important issues, introduce you to other donors and include your entire family.
Helping You Create a Lasting Legacy Through Estate Planning

We also offer many ways to incorporate charitable giving into your estate planning—and will help you decide which type of gift is right for you. You can make a gift by will or trust; gifts of retirement plan assets and life insurance; and gifts that pay you income and preserve assets for your heirs.

Investing in the Future through the Permanent Fund for Boston

You can also make a permanent gift to Greater Boston’s primary endowment, which has been built by hundreds of donors since 1915, with confidence that it will always be used to meet the most urgent needs facing our community. These are the funds that support all of our competitive grantmaking in Greater Boston. Permanent gifts can also be directed to a cause or issue that means the most to you—or even a specific nonprofit organization that has made a difference in your life.

Having an Impact Through the Civic Leadership Fund

Many Boston Foundation donors and others make an annual gift to the Civic Leadership Fund, which fuels innovation by helping the Foundation identify and address critical challenges facing our community. Through gifts to this fund, the Foundation publishes cutting-edge research, holds compelling public forums and creates action plans for positive change, making real progress in education reform, health and wellness, smart-growth housing and our cultural infrastructure.

Choosing the Contribution That’s Right for You

We accept gifts of cash, stocks and bonds, complex assets, including closely held or restricted stock, gifts of real estate and LLC or partnership interests. Whether you make a charitable gift during your lifetime or through your estate, we can accommodate your giving plans.
Hundreds of individuals, families and companies have immeasurably strengthened the Greater Boston community by establishing and contributing to funds at the Boston Foundation. Many of our donors work closely with our Philanthropic and Donor Services staff to enhance their giving—and an ever-growing number take advantage of planned and legacy giving opportunities. The following pages list all of the funds held by the Foundation and the many donors who have contributed to them. Each fund has its own name, purpose and history, but all of them gain strength from being managed and invested together—and all of them contribute to strengthening Greater Boston’s community foundation for today and the future.

New Donors to the Permanent Fund for Boston

The Permanent Fund for Boston, Greater Boston’s primary endowment fund, has been built through the generosity of hundreds of donors since 1915, providing the Boston Foundation with crucial flexible resources for its competitive grantmaking in Greater Boston.

The Rogerson Legacy Society

The Boston Foundation’s “Rogerson Legacy Society” was established to honor those donors who have made planned and legacy gifts to support the work of the Boston Foundation for years to come. A special exhibit in the Foundation’s reception area recognizes them—and every year the Foundation holds special events to honor the members of this special society.
Donors to the Civic Leadership Fund

Thanks to the support of the Civic Leadership Fund, the Boston Foundation is helping to create the change our community needs in education, health and other areas of critical importance to the people of Greater Boston and the region. Every year, the Foundation publishes groundbreaking research, holds provocative and stimulating forums and creates action agendas that have a profound impact on our city and our region. In 2009, the Foundation raised more than $1 million to support this work.

We thank these civic-minded contributors who have made gifts to the Fund over the years.

Kevin McCall, Donor to the Civic Leadership Fund

Kevin McCall, President and CEO of Paradigm Properties and Paradigm Capital Advisors and Founder of Building Impact, is deeply committed to Greater Boston with a focus on civic engagement, youth leadership and social justice. “This is what led me to contribute to the Civic Leadership Fund,” he says. “Through the Fund, the Foundation is using rigorous research and its convening power to understand problems, identify solutions, and call us to action to meet the challenge of making our urban community an even better place for all residents.”
Many donors have established funds that are totally unrestricted or have broad purposes, giving the Boston Foundation the flexibility it needs to have a positive impact on Greater Boston. The Deshpande Foundation

The Deshpande Foundation, a Supporting Organization of the Boston Foundation, was created by a husband and wife team: Gururaj “Desh” Deshpande and Jaishree Deshpande, who believe in the power of innovation and entrepreneurship to shape a positive future. Together, they established the Deshpande Center for Technology at MIT to increase the impact of MIT inventions in the marketplace. The Deshpandes also invest in finding new ways to address seemingly insurmountable worldwide problems, such as hunger, malnourishment and poverty through model programs in India.
The Boston Foundation has a mandate both to fulfill its role as Greater Boston’s community foundation today—by maximizing dollars available for making grants—and to ensure that the charitable dollars entrusted to the Foundation are available to continue this work tomorrow and in perpetuity. Robust development efforts and a well-diversified investment strategy enable the Foundation to meet both these objectives.

Fund for the 21st Century

The Fund’s assets are professionally managed in a pool known as the Fund for the 21st Century. The Foundation has a long-term investment horizon with relatively low liquidity needs. For these reasons, the Fund can tolerate short and intermediate term volatility in the interest of generating higher returns over the long-term.

Financial Oversight

The Foundation’s Investment Committee establishes investment policy, monitors the individual investment managers and their performance, and sets each year’s spending rate. The Investment Committee is assisted by an independent investment consulting firm.

The assets of the Fund for the 21st Century include not only traditional stock and bond investments, but participation in private equity, venture capital, real assets (real estate, timber and energy) and flexible capital strategies. Diversification among multiple asset classes helps to reduce the volatility of the Foundation’s endowment and should moderate market risk.

The Spending Policy

By using a spending policy, the Foundation helps to ensure that the charitable funds will be protected for the future, while continuing to have the most impact today. The 2009 spending rate was 6% for all permanently restricted endowed Boston Foundation Funds. The Foundation uses a smoothing mechanism that helps balance the current endowment market value and the previous level of spending. Spending is equal to 70% of spending from the previous year plus 30% of the 6% spending rate applied to the current market value.

Socially Responsible Investing and Proxy Voting

The Boston Foundation was the first major community foundation in the country to actively promote its values and expectations around the areas of corporate governance by exercising its right to proxy voting for its investments. Proxy voting is the basic mechanism through which shareholders can influence the governance and behavior of corporations in which they hold stock. The Foundation focuses its proxy voting on key issues including the environment, diversity and equity and good corporate governance.
Additionally, three years ago the Foundation began to distance itself from companies that are engaged in business in the Sudan through a two-part strategy. This strategy includes divestment of any direct holdings in such companies and a new approach of shorting stocks that are held indirectly by the Foundation as the result of investments held in pooled funds.

Audited Financial Statements

The Foundation’s financial statements are prepared under policies and procedures overseen by the Foundation’s independent Audit Committee and, ultimately, the Board of Directors. The statements are audited by KPMG LLP. A summary of the audited financial statements is shown here. The audited statements, are available on our web site at www.tbf.org.

Expense Control

The Foundation’s management and Board of Directors take careful steps to ensure that operating expenses are kept as low as possible. Because of difficult economic times, many cost reduction measures were implemented during fiscal year 2009. The Foundation strives to maintain an expense to total asset ratio of 1% or lower.

Note: The financial statements include all funds held by the Foundation, including the Fund for the 21st Century.

Activity from 2005 through 2009

Grantmaking from all Foundation funds increased by $17 million from 2008 to 2009. Gifts to the Foundation remained strong in fiscal year 2009 despite the economy; however, given the investment losses, total assets decreased.
